Homework Assignment #1

• In this assignment you will create an XHTML document that displays information about you that is styled using basic CSS properties.

• The primary purpose of this assignment is to get you back into the mode of creating XHTML and CSS (or if you haven’t done much of this before, to give you an initial experience in doing so).

• When rendered by a browser the document should produce a page similar to the one shown on the next page. (Change the information so it is about you and not me! Feel free to expand the included information as well.)

• The primary requirements of this assignment are shown on the next page.
Assignment #1: REQUIREMENTS

- You must use an external style sheet to style your document.
- You must use an internal style sheet which overrides at least one of the rules in your external style sheet.
- You must use at least one inline style which overrides both an external and an internal style rule.
- Your document must contain at least one list (either ordered or unordered).
- You must use at least one color which is defined using the RGB hexadecimal notation scheme which is a “web safe” color (see the chart on the helpful things page).
- You must include a picture of yourself somewhere on the page using an `<img>` element.
- You must use several different colors of text and font types.
- Your XHTML document must validate against the Strict DTD and your CSS document must also validate successfully based on the W3C validators.
